April 2017

Robin Marcus, PT, PhD

Dr. Marcus is an Associate Professor of Physical Therapy and the Chief Wellness Officer for Health Sciences at the University of Utah. She is interested in the transformation of health care and of the responsibility that health care professionals have in helping to find solutions to the health and wellness challenges of our community. In her current role she is exploring the continuum of wellness and rehabilitation services that contribute to improved quality of life for healthy individuals and for those living with chronic health conditions. In addition to her role as the CWO, Dr. Marcus currently serves the University as the Associate Dean for Clinical Affairs for the College of Health, the Director of the L.S. Skaggs Patient Wellness Center, and as an advisory member for the Health Sciences Resiliency Center, and Graduate Medical Education Wellness committee. She is also active in local, regional and national wellness initiatives as a steering committee member of Get Healthy Utah, on the Board of Directors of Girls on the Run Utah, and on the Evidence-Based Practice committee of the national organization, Building Healthy Academic Communities.
